

Across

1. another name for 100BaseT Ethernet.
8. the chip that controls your computer.
10. a small program that copies itself and interrupts the computer or the network.
12. also known as the Web, this is the collection of specially created pages on the Internet viewed in a Web browser.
15. equipment that connects a computer to the Internet via a phone line.
17. a connection device that links two different types of networks.
18. every computer that accesses the Internet is assigned this number, consisting of a series of four numbers.
19. a computer that manages and stores all the print jobs sent to the printer from all computers on the network.

Down

2. software that flashes advertisements across your screen while another program is running.
3. the suffix in a domain name that indicates the type of server holding a Web site, such as .com or .edu.

4. the structure, or how the network is laid out. This is usually dependent on the network architecture.
5. a single length of cable runs between computers, which are configured in a ring.
6. ensures that you can send and receive information over the Internet.
7. signing up for, or adding your e-mail address, to a discussion list so you can participate in the discussions.
9. the space used to distribute air for ventilation in buildings; cable for this area must be plenum-approved.
11. the amount of information a connection can transfer at any one time.
13. the name of the server that holds all the Web site information, such as microsoft.com.
14. links on a Web site that let you jump between pages.
16. someone who gains unauthorized access to your computer system for the purpose of stealing or destroying data.